

This is the low-fi paper prototype I sketched. I want the shopping cart page to be visually consistent to the rest of the pages, that is why I am using the grid layout and the black and white color theme.

This is the high-fi that I created in figma. It basically follows the low-fi (using the grid layout, black outlines and black box for the chekout button). However, I decided to move "Total" to a separate row, because I noticed that the users are usually confused by the two prices that were placed in the same box in the low fi during user testing.
